WOULD TALK RATE MORGAN HALTS BILL TO DEATH

Action of Senate Committee Said to be Blind to Get More Time.

HEPBURN BILL LIKELY TO PASS

Will Probably be Introduced in House To-day and Will be Pushed Forward by Advocates of Legislation-The Railroads Are Still Fighting.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.) WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—The Senal

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—The Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce to-day ovinced a desire to go at considerable length into the subject of conferring the power of making railroad rates upon the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The question came up in a hearing given to-day to the representatives of the Association of State Railroad Commissioners, when Senator Newlands undertook to question the witnesses as to the relations now existing between the State commissions and the Interstate Commerce Commission and the method employed by railroads in absorbing other railroads. Some objection was made to this line of questioning on the ground that it was not pertinent to the Quaries-Cooper bill, which was being considered by the committee.

Sonstor Newlands stated that he did not understand the inquiry was being con-ducted as to only one of the proposed measures and he wished for information ducted as to only one of the proposed measures and he wished for information upon this point.

The matter later came up in executive session, and the committee agreed to give to railrond representatives and others hearings on this subject. Mr. Newlands usked if there would be any objection to questioning them as to their views of a national incorporation act under which the railroads might he brought more directly under the supervision of the Federal government and no objection was expressed. He then moved that the committee request the Senvite for permission to sit auring its session, which was acted upon favorably. The committee then adjourned subject to the edit of the chairman, no date for hearings having been fixed, except that the railroad commissioners who appeared this morning were fixed, except that the railroid commis-sioners who appeared this morning were requested to return in February for fur-ther hearing, and were requested to pre-sent the draft of a bill in accordance with their views, which differ very materially from those of the advocates of the Coop-er-Quaries bill.

Hepburn Bill to Pass.

There is every reason to believe that the programme outlined in these dis-putches two weeks ago regarding rate legislation will be carried out, or attempted.

The bill which Mr. Hepburn will introduce to-morrow almost certainly, and which embodies the views expressed by the President in his message, will pass the House at this session. There will not be lengthy discussion in that body, and it be lengthy discussion in that body, and it will be gotten to the Senate as quickly as possible. While the result in that branch of the legislative department of the government cannot be foretold, it is the wish of the closest friends of the President that the bill be got through before the fourth of March.

The speaches made before the House Committee on Interstate Commerce last week by Samuel Stenger, president of the Committee on Interstate Commerce last week by Samuel Spencer, president of the Southern, and by various representatives of the railroads this week, indicate very clearly that the railroads oppose legislation of any character, save that which is almed to prevent the granting of relates. The Elkins law, enacted in 1902, forbids the granting of a lower rate to one shipper than is granted to another shipper, and it was at first contended by the railroad men, when the agitation shipper, and it was at hist contended by the railroad men, when the agitation for rate regulation began at this session, that the giving of rebates had ceased. This is no longer contended before the committee, and it is urged that the legis-lation which will be enacted should con-fine itself solely to the abating of the evil of favoritism towards certain ship-pers.

Question of Rebates.

Question of Rebates.

The legislation proposed for the regulation of rates does not contemplate, primarily, the prevention of rebates, being given. The Elkins act'ls supposed to cover that. The bill, primarily, is designed to prevent the charging of exorbitant rates. The commission will be given the power to fix reasonable rates, and while the roads may grant cheaper rates than those fixed by the commission, the shipper will be reasonably certain that he is not being charged an unfair rate, though some other fellow is getting a better one. It is also pointed out that the granting of robutes will not be so general under the new law, for if, as claimed, rates are in many instances too high, which is urged as a great reason for the conferring the rate making power upon the government, and they are lowered to a reasonable point by the commission, it will not be possible for the transportation companies to make a lower rate without losing money, Of course, there are qualifications to this statement, but in the main it is believed to be correct.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 20.—With a precesse of "getting lancressed and busy," the Senate Committee on Interstate Continerce asked permission to-day to sit through the sessions of the Senate and take testimony on the "great question of railroad rates legislation, so much desired by the President."

Word has gone forth that Senator Elkins, its chairman, and other members of the committee are in "curnest in the matter," and as evidence that they are really intent on "doling something," this request to hold continuous sessions is pointed to with a great show of virtue and sincerity.

No one who knows the vent attention is pointed as sincerity.

No one who knows the real situation is deceived. These hearings have been going on for fourteen years. It is a move in the interest of the railroads and delay. (Continued on Second Page.)

at the last session to investigate the subject will pass, but the chances against it are so strong that those for it are scarcely worth considering.

It is learned to-night from an entirely trustworthy source that the powerful influence of J. Pierpont Morgan is being exerted for the purpose of defeating such legislation, and that the opponents of the measure believe he has succeeded.

Mr. Morgan is directly interested in the subject. He is one of the principal stockholders in the United Fruit Company, commonly called the Fruit Trust. This company has a fleet of fifty vessels plying between New Orleans and Boston and Central American ports. The majority of these fly the Belgian flag. Under the laws of Belgium sailors do not have to be paid such large wages for do they have to be so well fed as do those who sail on American vessels. Mr. Morgan maturally is opposed to legislation which may compel him to import fruit in American bottoms. All the influence he could command, therefore, has been used to defeat legislation which proposed to, subsidize American shipbuilders and American companies engaged in sea trade. It is believed he has been successful. It is believed he has been successful.

A large and thoroughly interested au-

A large and thoroughly interested audience last night heard Colonel Wilfred E. Cutshaw at Lee Camp Hall make an address on the battle at Spotsylvania Courthouse May 18, 1864, commonly known as the "Bloody Angle."
Colonel Cutshaw illustrated his graphic portrayal of the movement of the forces and the strategic movement in that mighty artillery duel and the subsequent clash of infantry at close range, hymens of a chart showing accurately the lines of both sides, the troops engaged and the shifting of the forces, as the opposing sides met the assaults of the other. In this terrific clash the artillery forces on each side played an important part; and the superiority of the Conference batteries saved the slay.
